Mayor Menino Announces Boston Buying Power

November 14, 2008 · No Comments

Yesterday I attended a press conference held at CitySquares customer, Model Ace Hardware in Allston. Mayor Menino was there to announce the city's new Boston Buying Power initiative. If you haven't heard about Boston Buying Power yet, than listen up! This truly is exciting news for local businesses.

Boston Buying Power is an energy buying group designed to allow small businesses to purchase energy at a long-term fixed price through access to the deregulated energy market. Boston Buying Power puts small businesses on a level playing field with the largest of commercial accounts and enables them to take advantage of benefits that until now have been unavailable to the small business community.

"Boston is committed to encouraging and supporting strong business communities. One of the ways we can do this is by advocating for small businesses and providing resources during difficult economic times," Mayor Menino explained.

"Boston Buying Power is designed to give our hard working small business sector the peace of mind that comes from long-term price certainty and budget stability."

Enrollment is easy and not only will Boston Buying Power begin saving you money today but they can lock-in that lower price for up to five years providing long term price certainty and budget stability for small businesses. More information can be found at www.bostonbuyingpower.com.
